Toshi, che in giapponese significa città, è un sistema di mobili contenitori che richiama le decorazioni a mosaico presenti in alcuni edifici di Tokyo. La forma pulita ed essenziale risalta e valorizza il disegno geometrico inciso sulle ante dei mobili. A ogni tipologia di madia -distinte per le dimensioni- è associato un pattern specifico che rende unico il modulo. Inoltre, il sistema Toshi si completa di tre contenitori accessori più piccoli -ad ante o a cassetti- che possono essere posizionati sulle madie.

Il richiamo all'architettura giapponese è evidente: una micro città che sviluppa la sua essenzialità nelle forme geometriche, nelle altezze proporzionate e nei colori tonali. A dare supporto alla concezione architeturale della nuovo sistema, due versioni di gambe: una unica orizzontale chiusa a zoccolo, a richiamo dei podi degli edifici; e una più alta, fatta da quattro gambe in metallo a sezione quadrata, come se fossero le colonne di un portico.

Toshi, meaning city in Japanese, is a system of mobile containers which calls to mind the mosaic decorations to be found in certain buildings in Tokyo. The fresh and essential lines optimise and emphasise the geometric design engraved on the doors of the pieces. Each and every size of cupboard has its own distinct pattern, making the module unique.

In addition, the Toshi system is completed by three optional smaller containers, either with doors or drawers, which can be positioned on the modules themselves. The reference to Japanese architecture is obvious: a micro city which develops its essentiality in geometric shapes, in proportioned heights and tonal colours. Bearing the weight of the architectural conception of this new system, are two different versions of legs: a single, closed horizontal block, bringing to mind a podium; and another higher one, made up of four squared, metal legs, as if they were the columns of a portico.
